Republican candidate Frank LaRose has raised more than $1 million since launching his Ohio Senate bid three months ago, giving the secretary of state a slight boost as he faces a crowded primary field in the key battleground state.

LaRose reported a haul of $1,041,657 during the third fundraising quarter, ending with about $868,679 in cash on hand as he heads into the final three months of the year, according to a campaign finance report filed with the Federal Election Commission and first shared with the Washington Examiner...

“Despite Frank not being a self-funder and while his primary opponents will rely on their family fortunes to finance their latest Senate bids, our campaign will have more than enough resources to compete and win the primary,” his campaign said in a memo obtained by the Washington Examiner. “But there are things that money cannot buy in politics, and that is political support and outstanding polling numbers that back up this momentum.”

Internal polling conducted by the LaRose campaign shows the secretary of state leading his opponents by nearly 10 points, with 32% of Ohio voters saying they’d back LaRose compared to 22% who said the same for Dolan. Another 10% said they’d back Moreno, according to the poll.

LaRose has also garnered the backing of more than 250 conservative leaders in Ohio and has established leadership teams across all 88 counties in the Buckeye State, according to his campaign.
